The book 'Incentives and Disincentives in Organ Donation' provides the first systematic study on three types of incentives for organ donation. It covers extensive research conducted in four culturally different societies including: Hong Kong, Mainland China, Iran, and the United States. The research illustrates that a new model of incentives can be constructed to enhance organ donation in contemporary societies.

Experts from the four geographies will gather in Hong Kong on the UChicago Yuen Campus and present their findings. They will analyze different international models of organ donation and investigate what Hong Kong can learn from each distinctive approach.

Join the event on July 7 at 2:30pm in-person person at the UChicago Hong Kong Campus now.
