Yuen Speaker Series:

Math Learning Starts Early: How Families Can Help by Dr. Susan Levine

Susan Levine is the Rebecca Anne Boylan Professor of Education and Society and the Chair of the Department of Psychology at the University of Chicago. Her research focuses on the role of early interactions in the home environment on children's academic achievement. In this public lecture, she will discuss the relation of math anxiety to math achievement in both children and adults. She will also show how technology can be used to help math anxious parents support their children's math learning. Join us at the coming public lecture by Professor Levine to find all these out.
