Yuen Speaker Series - Social Capital and Community: How New Technology Provides Insight into the Lives of Urban-dwelling Older Adults (Sep 16)

The characteristics of the places where we age have profound consequences for our ability to adapt to change and maintain independence. Social capital, for instance, is believed to be central to health across the life course, but what is it, and how exactly does it matter? Professor Kate Cagney's new study will provide one example of the use of new technology to address fundamental questions in social capital accumulation, urban sociology and life course studies of health.
