100YLA Online Conversation Series: Intergenerational Transfer of Wealth (Jun 11)

The transfer of wealth between generations is fraught with challenges and opportunities. Communication between the generations can be sensitive, especially if there is estrangement between family members. Multiple sibling families with unique needs and expectations can strain family relationships. As people live longer, their resources may be used to maintain their standard of living leaving less wealth to share with their children. Racial disparities also exist in some communities where the flow of wealth from child to parent, not parent to child requires us to consider new rules to the intergenerational transfer of wealth.

Join us for an enriching conversation with Professor Kate Cagney and her special guests on Episode 4 of "100 Year Lives in Asia".
