Stagnant new home sales and slumping property stocks in China have brought China's real estate crisis under the spotlight again after the Evergrande crisis in 2021. Unstable employment, an aging population, and negative economic sentiment have compounded the resilience of China's real estate market since the end of COVID restrictions earlier this year.

China's Central government has introduced policies to stabilize the real estate market while regional governments are rolling out stimulus to reinvigorate the market. But, are policies like low mortgage rates and down payments enough to revive the housing market?

Listen to our experts to learn more about the current state of China's real estate market and the potential results from government policies and action August 31 at 8:30pm HKT.
