Classic Chinese stories are constantly being reinvented – not only in literature, and not only in China; these days, they are as likely to turn up in Korean films, Japanese video games, Vietnamese cartoons, or even American graphic novels. What accounts for the constant repurposing of a familiar character like the Monkey King or the White Snake, and what can we learn about a particular cultural moment by seeing how the characteristic uses of such figures changes over time?

Join us for this interesting University of Chicago Yuen Campus Hong Kong program to learn more about how – and why – Chinese high culture is being repurposed and revitalized through popular media creations.
