

Ashvin Veligandla

Graduate Student-at-Large Business (GSALB)
Chicago Booth MBA alumnus of the University of Chicago

Ashvin Veligandla is a Graduate Student-at-Large Business (GSALB) and Chicago Booth MBA alumnus of the University of Chicago. Originally from India, he brings a global perspective shaped by his academic journey, professional experience, and deep engagement with the University of Chicago community. He currently works at the Federal Reserve Bank, where he supports work in finance-focused and policy-driven environments.

Through the GSALB program, Ashvin took Chicago Booth coursework alongside degree-seeking MBA students as he prepared for graduate study and continued building his professional path. He credits the GSALB experience with helping him navigate the U.S. academic system, engage confidently in rigorous classroom discussions, and build meaningful connections with faculty and peers from around the world. With his international background and firsthand experience transitioning from India to UChicago, Ashvin is happy to share insights with prospective students—particularly those from India—on making the most of GSALB as a bridge to academic and professional growth.
